

5 LA-DI-DA LOOKS
 First there was the adulation of the Duchess of Cornwall's dress sense, then there were this season's catwalks, which could have been mistaken for a Cotswold village green, what with all the cricket jumpers, rugger shirts and general varsity vibe. And that was just the girls. Pick up your sweater at Paul Smith and collegiate kit at Tommy Hilfiger. And no self-respecting foot would be seen without its loafer – from Tod's, preferably. With Madonna now living in a pair of jodhpurs or plus fours, it seems that guitar grandad

Eric Clapton's co-ownership of the huntin', fishin', shootin' superstore Cordings of Piccadilly is a good idea after all. The new women's line is proving popular, and you can give your new look an outing at The Peacock at Rowsley hotel in Derbyshire, where guests go fly fishing and pheasant shooting.

Clockwise from left: Madge posing on her Wiltshire estate for Vogue; tweed hacking jacket, £269, Cordings; patent leather loafers, from a selection, Tod's

From left: 'fashion icon' Camilla; Eric Clapton's shop, Cordings; and preppy-plus style at Tommy Hilfiger

Entertain at home with a cake stand, left, or go for a spot of fishing at The Peacock, above. Silver-plated cake stand, £125, The Conran Shop; cakes, from a selection, Konditor & Cook

Kate Moss's fave brew bar, Tea Palace, top, and the old-school Wolseley, above

